Proof of German proficiency for family reunion applicants

All family reunion applicants desiring to join their spouse residing in Germany have to provide proof that they possess a sufficient basic knowledge of the German language. This is to ensure that, upon arrival in Germany, the applicant will be able to conduct basic communication in German.

Basic knowledge of the German language is knowledge of the German language on the competence level “A1” of the Common European Framework of Reference for languages. Detailed information on what A1-knowledge constitutes can be found on the website of the Council of Europe: www.coe.int/lang-CEFR

The mandatory proof of your language proficiency is rendered through a certificate issued upon passing a standardised language exam that complies with the standards of the Association of Language Testers in Europe (ALTE). At present, the Goethe-Institut Bangladesh (German Cultural Centre) is the only institution in Bangladesh which can issue such certificates. The Goethe-Institut Bangladesh can be contacted as follows:

Highly qualified applicants who can prove a job contract with a company in Germany that will hire them for working in a position adequate to their education are exempted from this requirement. Applicants who can prove that they are incapable of acquiring German proficiency due to a physical or mental illness or a handicap are also exempted.
